

October 8, 2015

Get Certified Today!

When employers are interviewing, the competition is often aggressive. If you have the certification, and the other person does not, you are at an advantage. Being certified plugs you into two new communities. You become more versatile to your surroundings and your task. You will be placed into situations where you may have to work with people that are in a transition of earning their certification, and people that are already certified. You gain so much confidence earning a certification, which is needed. You have set your sights on a objective, put together a plan, worked hard, and you reached your goal.

Being able to think outside your experience is an ingredient of leadership. You can be a better mentor. The ability to mentor is based on great experience, but the best mentors can reach beyond their experience. Leaders are able to learn from their experience, and relate it to someone else's entirely different experience. You become a continuous learner. Employers are always looking for people who never want to stop learning. Learning is a value unto itself, and those around you will respect and admire you for it.

Being certified can also earn you more money. Often, earning a certification can quickly lead to compensation increases of 20% and more.

With the discipline to master the material for the Microsoft certification, you are in a better position to evaluate the skills of others. You have had the opportunity to evaluate your own strengths and weaknesses. By earning that certification you have a broader understanding of the skills that can be effective. Being driven to achieve goals and continue to reach higher and higher is one of the greatest gifts in life. Go Get it!

Lauren Hilton
Monroe Langston Inc